Tenaris Provides Notice of European Commission Decision on Luxembourg's 1929 Holding Company Regime

Luxembourg, August 14, 2006. - Tenaris S.A. (NYSE, Buenos Aires and Mexico: TS and MTA Italy: TEN) ("Tenaris") announced today that the European Commission, or the EC, following an investigation of Luxembourg's 1929 holding company regime, has determined that the tax treatment of such holding companies is incompatible with the EU common market, and is requiring Luxembourg to cancel or modify the tax treatment of the 1929 holding companies not later than December 31, 2006. As a holding company under Luxembourg's 1929 regime, Tenaris is exempt from corporate income tax and certain other Luxembourg taxes and its dividend payments are exempt from withholding tax.

The EC decision contemplates a transition period, which would permit Luxembourg to allow pre-existing 1929 holding companies to continue benefiting from their current tax regime after implementation of the EC decision until December 31, 2010. However, pursuant to Article 2, paragraph 3, of the decision, such benefit would appear to terminate if all or part of the capital of such companies is transferred during the transition period. Tenaris believes, based on the reasons that led the EC to allow a transition period, that the above described effect should not apply to listed companies with publicly-traded securities. As neither listed companies nor their shareholders are able to prevent trading in the listed companies' shares, a different interpretation would defeat the purpose of the transition period that the EC deemed necessary to accommodate the expectations and reorganization needs of such companies and their shareholders.

Tenaris is confident that the EC, or the Grand-Duchy of Luxembourg in its implementing legislation, will clarify that the above described effect regarding capital transfers during the transition period does not apply to listed companies, such as Tenaris, but no assurances can be given in that respect. Tenaris will seek such clarification and take appropriate legal action in the unexpected case that the authorities fail timely to confirm Tenaris's interpretation.
